

GRADUATE SCHOOLS – The Graduate School of Global and Intercultural Studies

The Graduate School of Global and Intercultural Studies offers the following program:
Program in Global and Intercultural Studies (MA/PhD) (国際交流研究科・国際交流専攻)

Graduate Program in Global and Intercultural Studies*Introduction

The field of this program is globalization. Until recently, the methodology of the social sciences was framed by nation-states, which in turn provided much of the basic framework for modern societies. The process of modernization in every society necessitated cultural as well as political integration as a nation. The dynamism of world history developed through cooperation and competition among nation-states. However, after the 1970s, nation-states began to evolve and merge into a new global order. Capital, goods, labor and even culture began to move more rapidly across the borders of nation-states. The door to the age of globalization started to open. Nobody yet knows the endpoint of the processes unleashed by globalization. It may lead to a new age of universal culture, but it may also lead to intensified international and social friction.

In this program, the curriculum is divided into three fields:

- (1) Globalization studies, which includes: globalization and contemporary societies; globalization and international relations; and globalization and social movements.
- (2) Globalization and local communities, which includes: globalization and local cultures.
- (3) Globalization and Japan, which includes: Japan in the process of globalization; and globalization and social problems in Japan.
