The Department of Global and Intercultural StudiesIntroduction

The Department of Global and Intercultural Studies offers a multi-disciplinary program to promote understanding of global society and the world's regions. The programs, which are based on our vision of a future global society of peace and coexistence, are:

(1) International Cooperation Program

In this program, students will learn about a wide range of social, political and economic issues that are complexly interrelated and transcend national borders, e.g. peace and security, poverty and inequality, and human rights and development. Further, students will deepen their knowledge of various international cooperation programs and activities.

(2) Cultural Communication Program

This program aims to have students develop an understanding of the diverse and integrally related regional cultures that exist throughout the world by employing a variety of approaches that transcend nation-state-centric perspectives. The course of studies will first focus on individual regions (e.g. Asia, including Japan; Europe; and Latin America) so that students can discover how regional development has been shaped by history, culture and religion. Then, by fostering respect for cultural diversity and understanding for peoples from other cultures, students will broaden their knowledge of both the contemporary world and the histories of intercultural communication and interaction so as to develop their capacity for acting on the global stage.

(3) The Human Environment Program

In this program, students will learn about a variety of issues that are close to home such as: everyday life and the environment; social movements advocating the local production of food for local consumption; tourism; social businesses; media diversification; and social welfare, economic inequality, and social stratification. Students will consider various ways of addressing these issues, and think through how these issues relate to their everyday lives. By making changes for the better and regaining harmony, students will cultivate the practical skills required for living together with others on our planet.
